It is evident from these texts, said the preacher, that while the early Christians believed that devout righteomoress is all that is ssential to salvation, yet that for some reason they also believed tout the religion of Christ has a worth of its own which makes it superior to all other forms of religion. In what, then, ites its special excellence? The modern study of comparative religious

Lieutenant Schuyler asked Red Cloud if he thought Lieutenant Dodd could succeed in obtaining the services of fifteen of his warriors. The old chief, in a very grave tone of voice, and without raising his eyes from the ground, said: "My people are said at beart since their brethren were killed here some moons ago. They are very angry with the whites, and I am nearly certain will not nesist them."

intellectual grandeur of Christendom. This arises more from race and climatic characteristics than from religious connections.

In this Christianity is peculiar, viz: in being the religion which is indissolubly, vitally connected with a person. Christian faith, othics, and hope would not be Christian separated from the personality of Christ. That personality is defined by the name "Sen of God." Jesus represents the part of divine Souship; does not exhaust it, but was rather the prototype of the universal divine souship of man. In this our religion is unique. It announces that as our religion is unique. It announces that as many as are led by the Spirit of God they are Sons of God. But the sonship of man involve the Fatherhood of God. God, thought of as the Father, is peculiar to Christianity. Be-fore Christ the word Father had been used, bu in the acuse of only guardiauship—of provi-dence. Christ used it as declarative of unity of life in God and man, divinity in manhood, humanity in the footbeed.
